

Music and the Arts

Although North Carolina was hardly known as a home for the arts, by the 1850s, homegrown arts were flourishing, especially poetry and music. From the simple but moving lines of spirituals and folk ballads to the formal verses of poets, black and white North Carolinians found ways to express their joys, their sorrows, and their hopes for the future.

Section Contents

- Joining Together in Song: Piedmont Music in Black and White
- African American Spirituals
- The Gospel Train
- I'm Gwine Home on de Mornin' Train
- Long Way to Travel
- Frankie Silver
- The Ballad of Frankie Silver
- All Hail to Thee, Thou Good Old State
- The Old North State
- George Moses Horton
- Death of an Old Carriage Horse

User Tags:

Chapter Cover

history

music history

North Carolina

North Carolina History

poetry

Students

Teachers

Creative Commons BY-NC-SA

From:

ANCHOR: A North Carolina History Online Resource

Copyright Date:

2009

Artifacts:

[1]

Black and white North Carolinians made contributions to the arts that were sometimes very different and sometimes intertwined.

3 January 2018

Source URL:<https://ncpedia.org/anchor/music-and-arts>

Links

[1] <https://www.ncpedia.org/media/banjo-statue>