<sup>[4]</sup>Many churches of a variety of denominations maintain facilities throughout North Carolina used for recreational camping, meetings, retreats, and other events. Mountain <sup>[5]</sup> areas have been attractive to such groups because of their cool evenings and beautiful scenery, while seaside <sup>[6]</sup> camps have provided church members with good swimming, sandy beaches, and some privacy for their programs. The United Methodist Church <sup>[7]</sup> maintains one of the shining lights of church camping facilities in North Carolina—the Lake Junaluska Conference and Retreat Center <sup>[8]</sup> in Haywood County <sup>[9]</sup>. The site includes youth facilities, an open-air auditorium, hotels, and hundreds of private dwellings. Drawing patrons from Methodist churches throughout the Southeast, a town has grown up around the lake, which is the reservoir formed by a dam built in the early part of the twentieth century.

There is no accurate census of mountain church camps, but it is believed that more than 15 established denominational camps exist in the Blue Ridge Mountain area. Montreat <sup>[3]</sup>, a sprawling facility near Black Mountain <sup>[10]</sup> (Buncombe County <sup>[11]</sup>), has been a significant part of the worship and ecclesiastical life of southern Presbyterians since its purchase by the church in 1906. The Black Mountain area is also home to church camps run by Free Will Baptists and Disciples of Christ. Nearby is Ridgecrest <sup>[12]</sup>, a Southern Baptist Camp serving North Carolina churches. The Episcopal Church <sup>[13]</sup> maintains Kanuga <sup>[14]</sup> in the mountains (a retreat center for all ages in the Brown Summit area), Vade Mecum for youth, and Camp Leach <sup>[4]</sup> in the east.

The most prominent seaside camp is at a former military installation called Fort Caswell <sup>[15]</sup>, in Brunswick County <sup>[16]</sup>, where the Southern Baptists have developed a thriving camp that is used by youth, families, and individual churches. The Neuse River <sup>[17]</sup> has provided sailing as well as water sports for camps like Don Lee <sup>[18]</sup> (a United Methodist camp) and Camp Caroline <sup>[19]</sup> (a Disciples of Christ <sup>[20]</sup> camp). Lakes have been the site of several camps, such as the Rockfish Camp <sup>[21]</sup> near Fayetteville <sup>[22]</sup> and Camp Chestnut Ridge <sup>[23]</sup> near Eno. Several church camps have been established at Lake Norman and other lakes near Charlotte <sup>[24]</sup>. The Roman Catholic <sup>[25]</sup> Church is particularly interested in retreat centers and has expanded its program and facilities throughout North Carolina.

In addition to Christian groups, Buddhists have established Zen centers both in the mountains and in the Chapel Hill area, and Muslims have begun to enter the religious camp trend in the state.
