<sup>[12]</sup>

Various peace movements that occurred in the North and South during the Civil War <sup>[4]</sup> had a strong impact on the political climate of both sections. In the Confederacy <sup>[13]</sup>, North Carolina produced the largest and most aggressive peace movement, which developed in three phases: a protest against the state draft in March 1862, the establishment of the Peace Party in the summer of 1863, and a convention movement in 1864.
