

Ramsour's Mill, Battle of ^[1]

Ramsour's Mill, Battle of

by Daniel W. Barefoot, 2006; Revised by SLNC Government and Heritage Library, March 2024

Battle of Ramsour's Mill Historical Marker 0-3. US 321 in Lincolnton. Image courtesy of North Carolina Office of Archives & History.

^[2]The Revolutionary War battle at Ramsour's Mill in Lincoln County took place on 20 June 1780. With the American surrender of Charles Towne (present-day Charleston, S.C.) on 12 May 1780, British military control of South Carolina and Georgia was virtually complete. North Carolina, which had been spared warfare since the Battle of Moore's Creek Bridge four years earlier, appeared to be the next objective of British commander Lord Charles Cornwallis ^[3] and his 8,345-man army.

While Cornwallis was content to spend the summer in Charles Towne, giving his troops an opportunity to rest and resupply, two of his American officers, Lt. Col. John Moore and Maj. Nicholas Welch, were anxious to pave the way for the invasion of their home state. In early June Moore and Welch returned from service in South Carolina and promptly set about organizing a band of Loyalists ^[7], or Tories, to aid in the British conquest of North Carolina.

On 13 June the Loyalists recruited by the two officers began to assemble in Lincoln County at Ramsour's Mill on the north side of present-day Lincolnton, about seven miles west of the homes of Moore and Welch. On receiving the news of the massing Loyalists, Gen. Griffith Rutherford ^[8] sent word to Col. Francis Locke ^[9] of Rowan County ^[10] and Maj. Robert Wilson of Mecklenburg County ^[11] to gather a force to disperse the Loyalists. On the night of 19 June, with 400 poorly trained, ill-equipped militiamen from Rowan, Mecklenburg, and Lincoln Counties, Locke set out from his camp on Mountain Creek for Ramsour's Mill, some 15 miles away. Meanwhile, the number of Tories camped on the wooded hill 300 yards from the mill had grown to 1,300, although one-fourth of them had no weapons.

As he neared the site of the Tory encampment in the predawn hours of 20 June, Locke was greeted by Adam Reep, a local Patriot who had scouted and monitored the Loyalists' activities. Once Reep had supplied him with information about enemy troop strength and local terrain, Locke decided to launch an attack against the unsuspecting Tories.

With cavalymen out front, the Patriots began their ascent of the east side of the hill at first light. Fog limited visibility to 50 feet. Although momentarily caught off guard, the Tories rallied, and a savage battle raged for almost two hours. Brother against brother, neighbor against neighbor, the men fought in mortal hand-to-hand combat. In this civil war, there were no uniforms. To identify themselves, the Patriots pinned white paper on their hats while the Tories stuck green twigs in theirs.

Although they outnumbered the Patriots by more than three to one, the Tories were routed and fled down the west side of the hill toward the mill. When the fog lifted and the smoke cleared, the battlefield revealed more than 70 dead and 200 wounded, equally divided between the two sides. The unclaimed dead were buried in a mass grave on the hill.

The Battle of Ramsour's Mill effectively disrupted Tory support for the British war effort in the region. Not only did it rob Cornwallis of badly needed Loyalist assistance when he crossed into North Carolina; it also provided the impetus and inspiration for the crucial Patriot victory that was to follow less than 30 miles away at the Battle of King's Mountain on 7 Oct. 1780.

Although much of the battlefield is now covered with public school buildings, the mass grave site and the graves of several of the officers who fell in the battle have been marked through the efforts of historical groups and individuals.

References:

William A. Graham, "The Battle of Ramsour's Mill," North Carolina Booklet 4 (June 1904).

William Sherrill, Annals of Lincoln County (1937).

Additional Resources:

Lincoln Country Historical Association: <http://www.lincolncountyhistory.com/projects/ramsour/ramsour.html> ^[12]

Battle Letter: http://www.lib.unc.edu/mss/inv/r/Ramsour%27s_Mill_Battle.html ^[13]

Image Credit:

Battle of Ramsour's Mill NC Historical Marker 0-3. Image courtesy of the North Carolina Office of Archives & History. Available from <https://ncmarkers.com/Markers.aspx?MarkerId=O-3> ^[14] (accessed March 6, 2024).

Subjects:

American Revolution \(1763-1789\) ^[15]

Battles ^[16]

War ^[17]

Authors:

Barefoot, Daniel W. ^[18]

Origin - location:

Lincoln County ^[19]

From:

Encyclopedia of North Carolina, University of North Carolina Press. ^[20]

1 January 2006 | Barefoot, Daniel W.

Source URL: <https://ncpedia.org/ramsours-mill-battle>

Links

[1] <https://ncpedia.org/ramsours-mill-battle> [2] <https://ncmarkers.com/Markers.aspx?MarkerId=O-3> [3] <https://ncpedia.org/american-revolution> [4] <https://ncpedia.org/geography/lincoln> [5] <https://ncpedia.org/moores-creek-bridge-battle> [6] <http://www.pbs.org/wnet/historyofus/web02/features/bio/B03.html> [7] <https://ncpedia.org/loyalists> [8] <https://ncpedia.org/biography/rutherford-griffith> [9] <https://ncpedia.org/biography/locke-francis> [10] <https://ncpedia.org/geography/rowan> [11] <https://ncpedia.org/geography/mecklenburg> [12] <http://www.lincolncountyhistory.com/projects/ramsour/ramsour.html> [13] http://www.lib.unc.edu/mss/inv/r/Ramsour%27s_Mill_Battle.html [14] <https://ncmarkers.com/Markers.aspx?MarkerId=O-3> [15] <https://ncpedia.org/category/subjects/us-revolution> [16] <https://ncpedia.org/category/subjects/battles> [17] <https://ncpedia.org/category/subjects/war> [18] <https://ncpedia.org/category/authors/barefoot-daniel-w> [19] <https://ncpedia.org/category/origin-location/piedmon-17> [20] <https://ncpedia.org/category/entry-source/encyclopedia>