

Primary Source: Cargo Manifests of Confederate Blockade Runners ^[1]

A cargo manifest is a list of the cargo carried on board a ship. These manifests are from blockade runners traveling from Bermuda to the Confederate States, and they were found in the Custom House at St. George's, Bermuda, many years after the war. Bermuda and the Bahamas were good trading posts for blockade runners, because of their location and because the residents mostly supported the Confederacy.

The manifests here are a small sample of the records that survive, but they will give you an idea of the kinds of merchandise Southerners were willing to pay for during the war. It's obvious that some of the items were for military use, but it's equally obvious that other items were not. Items such as sugar, coffee and tea, wine, fine cloth, and paper became increasingly scarce during the war, and they could fetch a higher price than the lead, rope, boots, and blankets the army needed -- and so enterprising blockade runners were sure to pack as many luxury items onto their ships as possible.
