

Primary Source: Poster Announcing Japanese American Removal and Relocation ^[1]

The following is the text from a relocation notice from World War II. These notices were placed around neighborhoods, particularly those with large populations of people with Japanese descent such as those in San Francisco. They told people living there that they would be removed and relocated at certain time. These posters were used by the War Relocation Authority to gather and relocate Japanese American people to Assembly Centers, where they would then be processed and moved to Wartime detention facility during the period of imprisonment of Japanese-American people.
