

Inauguration of Franklin Roosevelt, March 4, 1933

Video:  Inauguration of Franklin Roosevelt, March 4, 1933

Duration: 7:43

Transcript:

Audio Transcript

Narrator (00:13)

250,000 people are in Washington for the inauguration. But for those unable to get there, Universal Newspaper Newsreel is rushing pictures of the epic ceremony by the fastest air express plane in the country. The speedy plane takes off, and soars over the national capital. Even while President Roosevelt is still on the inaugural stand. At 230 miles an hour, the record-breaking Air Express wisps its historic freight to the scene, arriving at New York while newspaper wires are still hot with the story of the great event. And while the radio still roared with acclamations for the new president. At the airport, a fast car with police escort is waiting, and the film is transferred almost as soon as the plane touches the ground. No bid is overlooked in the race against time to serve the newsreel public. And the Universal Newspaper Newsreel is establishing a record for speed. Here they come, on the last lap.

Narrator (01:12)

And here it is. The beginning of the greatest drama in American affairs. The creation of a new chief executive. According to time-honored custom, the retiring president and the president-elect ride together from the White House with congressional escort down the long and crowd-packed Pennsylvania Avenue to the capitol, where Roosevelt is to take the oath of office. Enthusiasm is at its height. Never was there such a joyful, jubilant, yelling, applauding inauguration crowd. Roosevelt is the nation's idol here today.

Narrator (01:43)

Thousands of Americans are here to cheer the birth of a new era in national affairs. A New Deal era, which is supposed to pull the country out of its chaos. The hosts of democracy are here, who celebrate the greatest party victory of all time.

Narrator (02:00)

And now, everything is ready for the big moment. Chief Justice Hughes of the United States Supreme Court prepares to administer the oath of office to Franklin D. Roosevelt, making him the 32nd president.

Chief Justice Hughes (02:14)

Do you, Franklin Delano Roosevelt do solemnly swear that you will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States. And will, to the best of your ability, preserve, protect, and defend the constitution of the United States, so help you God.

FDR (02:40)

I, Franklin Delano Roosevelt do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States. And will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the constitution of the United States, so help me God.
[applause]

FDR (3:04)

This is a day of national consecration. And I am certain that on this day my fellow Americans expect that on my induction into the presidency I will address them with a candor and a decision, which the present situation of our people impel. I am prepared, under my constitutional duty, to recommend the measures that a stricken nation in the midst of a stricken world may require. These measures, or such other measures as the Congress may bill out of its experience and wisdom, I shall speak within my constitutional authority to bring to speedy adoption. But, in the event that the Congress shall fail to take one of these two courses, in the event that the national emergency is still critical, I shall not evade the clear course of duty that will then confront me. I shall ask the Congress for the one remaining instrument to meet the crisis: broad executive power. To wage a war against the emergency. As great as the power that would be given to me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe. [applause] This nation is asking for action, and action now. [applause] In this dedication of a nation, we humbly ask the blessing of God. May He protect each and every one of us. May He guide me in the days to come.
[applause]

Narrator (07:32)

More power to you, President Roosevelt. The entire country's behind you, thrilled with hope and patriotism.

Usage Statement:

Public Domain

Public Domain is a copyright term that is often used when talking about copyright for creative works. Under U.S. copyright law, individual items that are in the public domain are items that are no longer protected by copyright law. This means that you do not need to request permission to re-use, re-publish or even change a copy of the item. Items enter the public domain under U.S. copyright law for a number of reasons: the original copyright may have expired; the item was created by the U.S. Federal Government or other governmental entity that views the things it creates as in the public domain; the work was never protected by copyright for some other reason related to how it was produced (for example, it was a speech that wasn't written down or recorded); or the work doesn't have enough originality to make it eligible for copyright protection.

Source URL:<https://ncpedia.org/media/video/inauguration-franklin>