Environment and Natural Resources, Department of

by David Stick, 2006

The origins of what came to be known as the North Carolina Department of Environment and Natural Resources date as far back as 1823, when the state sponsored a geological survey. Later, state research activities were expanded to include forestry <sup>[2]</sup>, and in 1891 these and other varied functions were combined in a single agency, the North Carolina Geological Survey <sup>[3]</sup>. The name was changed to the North Carolina Geological and Economic Survey in 1905, and between then and its replacement by the Department of Conservation and Development in 1925 the agency took on still more responsibilities. From the outset, the Department of Conservation and Development was one of the more important divisions of North Carolina state government, and membership on its board was a widely sought political plum.

In addition to geology <sup>[4]</sup>, mineral resources <sup>[5]</sup>, and forestry, the divisions of the Department of Conservation and Development included marine fisheries, coastal resources, water resources, tourism <sup>[6]</sup>, advertising <sup>[7]</sup>, and state parks <sup>[8]</sup>. By the time it was replaced by the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development with adoption of the Executive Organization Act of 1971 <sup>[9]</sup>, the new department included 18 different agencies, boards, and commissions. Other name changes followed, and by 1998 the state's catchall agency was known as the Department of Environment and Natural Resources. In the early 2000s, the department worked to protect water quality, air quality, and public health <sup>[10]</sup> through various programs designed to do everything from encouraging respect for the environment to assisting businesses, local governments, and the public with technical matters related to its divisions.
