

Penmanship ^[1]

Share it now!

Penmanship

by George Stevenson, 2006

Penmanship as a deliberate manner of writing was scarcely practiced in North Carolina until the nineteenth century and, with the rise of computers by the end of the twentieth century, was in danger of becoming an educational relic. The rise of private academies in the state early in the nineteenth century coincided with the availability of copybooks that were designed and published by acknowledged writing masters in the North. Copybooks contained engraved specimens of capital and small letters and were published as aids to the teaching of a variety of hands. Most popular was the current (or running) hand in which the letters were usually slanted to the right and the words formed without lifting the pen from letter to letter. In round (or copperplate) hand, the slope also inclined to the right, but the letters were round, bold, and full.

In most North Carolina academies, boys and girls were given the same kinds of primary copybooks in which to copy short letters, short and long letters combined, and short words commencing with capitals. While girls were expected to master the techniques to a degree higher than boys, both might have examples of their penmanship separately scrutinized in a public examination at the close of the school year.

Harper's New Graded Copy Books of Practical Penmanship, 1901. Image from the North Carolina Museum of History.

^[2]Few copybooks survive to reveal either the designer of the hand that was taught or the method of teaching it in the antebellum academies and private schools in the state. An examination of surviving letters and exercise books written by students suggests that a variety of models and methods were taught. The great majority of antebellum students, whose education was limited to the common schools, were taught the basic shapes of the letters and the rudiments of a cursive hand. The schools generally had terms of only three to four months in the year, and no effort was made to train the students in a highly finished hand. The common school system collapsed at the end of the Civil War ^[3], and after the public schools ^[4] were reopened in 1870, the system remained moribund for most of the century. Nevertheless, many of the towns and counties that were able to sustain their public schools in the postbellum period began to furnish their students with copybooks that had been approved by the State Board of Education ^[5]. In this era, a wide variety of copybooks were used, most notably ones that focused on the Spencerian hand, a system of penmanship developed about 1855 by Platt Rogers Spencer ^[6] (1800-64) of Ohio.

Two men from the world of classical writing masters dominated penmanship in the state's public schools during the first half of the twentieth century. Charles Paxton Zaner ^[7] (1864-1918) of Ohio and Austin Norman Palmer ^[8] (1860-1927) of Iowa both had been influenced by Spencerian forms, but both, in their specimen alphabets for schools, abandoned elongated loops, flourishes, and shading of letters. Palmer's method of moving particular muscles in writing while resting the fleshy part of the forearm on the desk was of advantage to commercial writers. Beginning in 1916, texts and writing books of the Zaner-Boser Company and the Palmer Company were used exclusively in the primary and commercial writing classes in the state's public schools.

With an ever-increasing reliance on home computers for homework and other assignments, penmanship has become systematically de-emphasized in North Carolina school systems. By the early 2000s, schools often required assignments to be typed rather than handwritten, and many students simply have never been made to learn the basics of modern cursive techniques, such as the D'Nealian method [9]. With keyboards replacing pens and pencils, the future of penmanship in the state remains unclear.

References:

William E. Henning, An Elegant Hand: The Golden Age of American Penmanship and Calligraphy (2002).

Ray Nash, American Penmanship, 1800-1850 (1969).

Additional Resources:

Jones, Delia W. "Manner of Educating Females." The North-Carolina Journal Of Education 2. No. 8. August 1859. p.232. <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,14318> [10]

Board of School Commissioners "Penmanship." Annual reports, course of study and by-laws for the guidance of the Board of School Commissioners of the city of Charlotte 1915-1916. Charlotte, N.C.: The News Printing House. 1916. p.8 <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,7026> [11]

Philbrick, Mr. "Common Branches: Penmanship." The North-Carolina Journal Of Education 3 No. 7. July 1860. p.1. <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,14307> [12]

"Palmer Method Penmanship Contest." North Carolina Education. May 1922. p. 21. <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,13932> [13]

Shaw, Lena V. "Handwriting in 1876." Detroit Journal of Education June 1922. p. 23.

Subjects:

Education [14]

Authors:

Stevenson, George [15]

From:

Encyclopedia of North Carolina, University of North Carolina Press.[16]

1 January 2006 | Stevenson, George

Source URL: <https://ncpedia.org/penmanship>

Links

- [1] <https://ncpedia.org/penmanship>
- [2] <http://collections.ncdcr.gov/RediscoveryProficioPublicSearch/ShowItem.aspx?26514+>
- [3] <https://ncpedia.org/history/cw-1900/civil-war>
- [4] <https://ncpedia.org/education-public>
- [5] <https://ncpedia.org/education-state-board>
- [6] <http://www.ohiohistorycentral.org/entry.php?rec=351>
- [7] <https://www.iampeth.com/artist/cp-zaner>
- [8] <https://www.iampeth.com/artist/austin-norman-palmer>
- [9] <http://www.dnealian.com/>
- [10] <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,14318>
- [11] <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,7026>
- [12] <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,14307>
- [13] <http://digital.ncdcr.gov/u/?p249901coll37,13932>
- [14] <https://ncpedia.org/category/subjects/education>
- [15] <https://ncpedia.org/category/authors/stevenson-george>
- [16] <https://ncpedia.org/category/entry-source/encyclopedia->