Seaman's Friend Society

by Craig M. Stinson, 2006

The Seaman's Friend Society was organized by a number of prominent businessmen, women, and other citizens in the city of Wilmington ^[2] to "improve the social, moral, and religious condition of the seamen." In 1853 the society purchased a home and chapel in downtown Wilmington along the Cape Fear River ^[3], intended to serve as an "economical, moral boarding house" and hospital. The society cared for nearly 500 sailors a year, providing a temporary home for the mariner who was weary from ocean travel and an environment in which he might successfully be "christianized." The Seaman's Friend Society ended in 1918.
