Signories

by William S. Powell, 2006

Signories ^[2], or "seignories," were territories over which an official, a group of officials, or an individual had dominion. The Fundamental Constitutions of Carolina ^[3] on 1 Mar. 1669 directed that the province be divided into counties ^[4], with each county further divided into eight signories held by the eight Lords Proprietors ^[5]. A signory was to consist of 12,000 acres, and manorial courts were to be held by feudal lords in the signories as well as in other places.
