Southern Part of Heaven [1]

Southern Part of Heaven

by Jerry Leath Mills, 2006

See also: State Names and Nicknames [2]

The "Southern Part of Heaven" is a phrase coined by author William Meade Prince [4] in 1950 for the title of his volume of reminiscences of growing up in Chapel Hill. Prince was drawing on an old, probably apocryphal anecdote about a Dr. Klutz, a Franklin Street store owner in the early years of the twentieth century. As Prince relates it, Klutz, on his deathbed, inquires of his Presbyterian [5] minister, Parson Moss, what heaven is like, and Moss replies: "Dr. Klutz, I believe Heaven must be a lot like Chapel Hill in the spring."

Prince's title has long held the status of a beloved cliché in Chapel Hill and continues to be cited in both promotional and sarcastic contexts. An example of the latter is a suggestion, not infrequently made, that in light of Chapel Hill's and the greater Research Triangle [6]'s development, population growth, and demographic change in recent years, the label should be emended to the "Southern Part of New Jersey."

References:

Additional Resources:

Image Credits:

Subjects:

Places [8]
Post War 20th Century (1946-2000) [9]
Slogans, slang, and sayings [10]

Authors:

Mills, Jerry Leath [11]

Origin - location:

Chapel Hill [12]

From:

1 January 2006 | Mills, Jerry Leath