UNC Press. p. 100. (Digital page 124). ^[3]Sherwood Haywood, banker, was born in Edgecombe County ^[4], the son of William ^[5] and Charity Hare Haywood. He first entered public life as clerk of the state senate, a position to which he was elected on 4 Jan. 1786, following the resignation of his brother, John Haywood, to accept the post of state treasurer ^[6]. He continued to serve as clerk of the senate until 24 Dec. 1798. Early in 1800, he moved from Edgecombe County to Raleigh ^[7], where he purchased four lots from John Haywood which comprised the block bounded by Wilmington, Edenton ^[8], Blount, and Jones streets. In 1804, when the Bank of Newbern ^[9] was chartered by the state, Sherwood Haywood became Raleigh agent of the bank, a position that he held until his death.

Haywood was one of the original trustees of the Raleigh Academy ^[10], serving for the rest of his life. He also subscribed to the fund to complete the Main (South) Building at The University of North Carolina ^[11]. Calvin Jones ^[12] described him as a "good, polite, clever, worthy man, who never contradicted anyone in his life." Haywood was the enslaver of Lunsford Lane ^[2], an enslaved then free black businessman and entrepreneur. He married Eleanor Hawkins, by whom he had nine children; one son was Richard Bennehan Haywood ^[13], who became a physician and surgeon in Raleigh. Haywood and his wife were buried in City Cemetery, Raleigh, in the Colonel William Polk ^[14] plot.
